

Case Study 2

Dean is on a geology degree. He has been seeing the counselling team for depression. On the field trip to Malaga last year, one of the geology tutors noticed a series of cuts on Dean's upper arm and believes Dean to be a suicide risk. He does not want Dean to go on the field trip to Iceland because the area is too dangerous for someone who is suicidal. He has already told Dean he cannot go. This means Dean will not be eligible for his full honours.

Dean has not himself complained, but his girlfriend has mentioned it to her personal tutor who has raised it with you, the head of Student Services.

What do you do?
